The Effect of Chess on Reading Scores:
District Nine Chess Program Second Year Report

"Students in a New York City chess program improved reading scores more than a control group. The gains made by chess players were compared to national performance and district performance..."

"This result is quite impressive. Stated simply, it tells us that while most District Nine students under-performed the national average in the second year of this study, most chess players*** outperformed the national average."
